

Chris Pomar Head of School

Swift School

Swift School welcomes Chris Pomar as Head of School. Swift prepares children with dyslexia and other language-based learning differences to be successful in life.

Experienced both in independent school leadership and in working with children with dyslexia, Pomar is uniquely qualified to take the leadership reins at Swift. Chris's past experiences include serving as the founding Executive Director of The Dyslexia Resource, a nonprofit which supports Atlanta public schools in remediating students with dyslexia, and as a 15-year member of the leadership team at Holy Innocents' Episcopal School.

Serving students in grades 1 through 8, Swift School employs educational approaches—including Orton-Gillingham—specifically tailored to the needs of students with language-based learning differences. Swift students achieve a level of academic progress that eluded them at other schools. Chris says, "Once these students understand their learning styles and how to advocate for themselves, the secrets to reading and learning are unlocked. The sky becomes the limit for them."

Chris and his wife Pam are ardent Atlanta United fans. They have three children and a granddaughter.
